FOREWORD

This draft checklist of Morris Swett Library holdings presents artillery organization histories owned by the library. Arrangement is indicated by the Table of Contents section which follows. In several cases identifying a unit as a regiment or battalion is difficult, particularly with changes in the division (triangular, square, pentomic) over the years. Users are encouraged to check the definitions section for assistance in identifying an organization and the index to locate precise units.

Inclusion of an item, or omission, neither implies Department of the Army or Field Artillery School indorsement or sanction of the compiler's point-of-view nor does it guarantee accuracy or completeness of content. This list is not intended to prove the existence of a given organization. It is a reference to holdings of this library. Plaudits are extended to staff members; Ms Elizabeth Dickson for her assistance in coordinating this project with the Word Processing Center, to Ms Tamara Johnson for her typing and proofing, and to Mrs. Sandra Clark for her catalog support.

DEFINITIONS

Army. This tactical force is comprised of 2 or more corps.

Battalion. This standard unit is composed of a headquarters and 2-4 batteries. It is next above the battery in size.

Battery. This standard unit or subunit corresponds to the company in size.

Brigade. This tactical organization is normally smaller than the division. One or more groups and 2-5 battalions are attached. It compares to the DIVARTY in function. During WWII the brigade consisted of 2 or more regiments.

Corps. This tactical organization usually has 2 or more divisions established to carry-out a major operation. It is larger in size than a division and smaller than a field army.

Division. This standard organization is larger than the regiment/brigade and smaller than the corps in size. It combines a major headquarters element with tactical units to conduct sustained combat. Prior to 1957 it had 3 or 4 regiments.

Field Army. This is the largest tactical land force. It may be composed of a varying number of corps and divisions. Before 1957, it had 2 or more corps and one or more divisions.

Field Force. This mixed-force unit is the same as the group in purpose and, as used in Vietnam, compares to the division in size.

Group. This flexible organization is composed of 2 or more battalions and/or 4 or more batteries which are attached for a given provisional purpose.

Platoon. This is a subdivision of a battery-sized unit.

Regiment. This organization consists of a headquarters and 4-6 battalions. Prior to 1957 a regiment was composed of a headquarters and 2 or more battalions. The regimental numbering system continues to be used to designate historically important artillery units.
