The healthcare administrator’s desk reference:
A managed care and healthcare contracting dictionary for the military health system

Carol A. Korody-Colwell, LTC, AN
U.S. Army-Baylor Program in Healthcare Administration
A strong working knowledge of managed care and health care contracting is the key to success for today's health care administrator. Specifically, a thorough knowledge of the language, terminology, and acronyms is fundamental to understanding today's health care delivery processes both in the civilian sector and the military health system. One consolidated desk reference was developed to improve communication and increase comprehension among and between providers and administrators across all services. The goal is to promote understanding and diminish confusion, thereby, albeit indirectly, improving the delivery of healthcare services.
Acknowledgments

I would like to thank a few individuals who were instrumental in the completion of this document.

A healthcare administrator’s desk reference:
A managed care and healthcare contracting dictionary for the military health system

Introduction

A failure to truly understand healthcare contracting and managed care can negatively impact a healthcare provider’s ability to meet patients’ healthcare needs. Feedback obtained from complaints and personal interviews supports the premise that a fundamental understanding of this new healthcare delivery system requires an understanding of, and familiarization with, the language in which it is grounded. The language difficulty is compounded by the composite nature of the system -- healthcare or maintenance, with a large contractual component, which is provided to a unique population.

Background

The origin of managed care dates back to the early 1900s (Fox, 1996), however, it is relatively new to the military health system (MHS). Beginning in the late 1980s, the MHS instituted numerous programs and initiatives in an attempt to control skyrocketing healthcare and Civilian Health And Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) costs (Barrett, 1996). Each initiative emphasized the delivery of accessible, high-quality, cost-efficient healthcare to all beneficiaries. The programs included the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative (CRI) initiated in February 1988; Catchment Area Management (CAM) begun in June of 1989; and, the Gateway to Care Program started in September of 1991(Barrett, 1996; Boyer & Sobel, 1996). Each of these programs was successful in providing evidence that managed care initiatives can assist in the containment of healthcare costs while maintaining or improving the quality of care delivered (Boyer & Sobel, 1996).

The Gateway to Care program resulted in a reduction of CHAMPUS growth by 7 percent over two years. This success led to what is now known as TRICARE, a three option, regional contract-based managed healthcare program. The implementation of TRICARE, transitioning the MHS to managed care, was initiated in March of 1995 and completed by June of 1998 (Department of Defense, 1997).

The implementation of TRICARE required the complete reengineering of healthcare delivery and management within the military health system. The managed care system brought new processes and methods such as pre-authorization, prospective reviews of patient referrals, case management, and a delivery system whereby healthcare is managed by a primary care provider. This change overwhelmed the current military direct care system.

The traditional military health system was characterized by large medical centers, which delivered predominately specialty care. With the implementation of TRICARE, the medical centers were without sufficient primary healthcare providers to meet the demand for the primary care services central to a managed healthcare system.

The transition to managed care, although anticipated, left the healthcare system struggling to provide care for its beneficiaries. When TRICARE changed the traditional method of delivering care, it brought new terminology, confusing many practitioners and almost all beneficiaries. Consequently, the MHS struggled to educate its healthcare professionals as well as its beneficiaries. The educational effort was robust and sought to ensure that healthcare providers could schedule, see, and refer patients to specialists and that beneficiaries knew how to access care, both in the direct care system and in the civilian network. The education programs were offered throughout the MHS and were sponsored by both the medical treatment facilities and the contractors. Program structure ranged from attendance at a single class to simply the review of written literature. However, the educational efforts did not meet the community need for instruction. As a result, a significant knowledge deficit remains frustrating providers, administrators, and the beneficiaries.

Statement of the Problem

A strong working knowledge of managed care and healthcare contracting is the key to success for today’s healthcare administrator. A thorough knowledge of the language, terminology, and acronyms is basic and fundamental to understanding today’s healthcare delivery processes. One consolidated desk reference providing this information for the MHS does not exist.

Literature Review

Numerous references are available to assist the healthcare administrator in the quest to learn the ‘jargon’ of managed care and/or healthcare contracting. References from short glossaries to simple dictionaries are readily available at bookstores and online. These references provide definitions and delineate the meaning of numerous acronyms. However, no one consolidated reference encompassing both managed healthcare and healthcare contracting was found, and certainly not one unique to the military health system.

Method

A literature review of pertinent references encompassing both managed care and healthcare contracting was conducted to gather information. Research efforts spanned published works including current texts used in graduate education in the fields of healthcare administration and contracting, brochures, healthcare contracts, federal regulations, and the Internet. Additionally, terminology specific to military healthcare was obtained from the services as well as from Department of Defense Health Affairs website. Concurrent with the literature search, experienced personnel working in the managed care and contracting disciplines were queried.

Following the accumulation of applicable information, two separate appendices were developed. Appendix A is simply a list of acronyms and abbreviations. Although the use of acronyms and abbreviations may confuse and complicate communications, especially across the services, they are, unfortunately, an inherent part of our culture. The list was created to facilitate communication and to fill the void, for no previous MHS acronym list found contained acronyms specific to managed care and healthcare contracting.

Appendix B is a dictionary of current terms and phrases used in managed care and healthcare contracting. Implementation of TRICARE throughout the MHS has resulted in a partnership with the civilian healthcare sector. This collaborative and mutually beneficial relationship demands a solid knowledge and understanding of the terminology of their milieu.

Following the completion of both appendices, the document underwent multiple levels of review. Peers, educators, and subject matter experts in the fields of managed care and healthcare contracting submitted critiques.

Discussion/Conclusions

As managed care begins to mature in the MHS, this document may serve as a desk reference across all services for those (a) entering the managed care field, (b) with minimal managed care experience, and (c) tasked with management and oversight of healthcare delivery. Wide dissemination would promote the adoption of a ‘common language’, standardizing the use of terms and acronyms. This desk reference could be made available to personnel working in the area of healthcare contracting, administrators working with healthcare contracts and students in all healthcare fields across the services. It would also be helpful to administrators and healthcare personnel working within the Department of Veteran’s Affairs (DVA), as the Department of Defense and the DVA work jointly to deliver healthcare services to all beneficiaries. Additionally, placement of this document on both the Knowledge Management Network (KMN) at Fort Sam Houston to enhance distance learning, and on Health Affairs’ web page to streamline tri-service adoption and implementation would facilitate access by all. The goal and desired end-state is to improve communication, increase comprehension, and diminish confusion among and between providers and administrators, thereby, albeit indirectly, improving the delivery of healthcare services.
